Scrooged Up!

DEDICATION

To all of those companies who keep struggling against sometimes insurmountable odds to keep the tradition of quality theater alive.

*The Playwright,
Dan Roberts*

STORY OF THE PLAY

The Hillsdale Community Theater wants to produce "A Christmas Carol," but they don't have enough actors to play the extraordinarily large number of parts. So their undaunted director, being resourceful (if not totally realistic), has triple and quadruple-cast the roles. And since everyone in sight has been recruited, the cast also fills in as costumers, stagehands and technicians. The impossibility of this situation brings tensions to a comical head as the final rehearsal invites one calamity after another. "Scrooged Up!" provides a Dickens of a time for everyone!

Scene 1: Scrooge's Counting House

(AT RISE: EVELYN, as narrator, stands at center. FRANK, as Scrooge, is working at his desk. If MUSIC is desired, play "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen" and fade under monologue.)

EVELYN: (Reading from a large book.) Jacob Marley was dead. Seven years dead on that Christmas Eve. Ebenezer Scrooge never painted out old Marley's name on their sign. There it stood, years afterward, above the warehouse door: "Scrooge and Marley, Counting House." Scrooge was tight-fisted: a squeezing, grasping, covetous old sinner. Heat and cold had little effect on him. No wind blew that was bitterer than he. Nobody ever greeted him on the streets, but what did he care? It was the very thing he liked: to edge his way along the crowded paths of life, warning all human sympathy to keep its distance.

(LARRY, as Cratchit, enters SL and removes his coat and hat. He holds them in his hand as he starts to wander the set.)

EVELYN: (Continued.) Now on the best of all the good days of the year, on Christmas Eve, old Scrooge sat busy in his counting house. It was cold, bike, bleating weather.

EVELYN: (Looking toward him.) What, dear?

CLAUDE: "Bleak, biting." You said, "bike, bleating."

EVELYN: No, I didn't.

CLAUDE: Yes, you did.

EVELYN: No, I didn't.

CLAUDE: It doesn't matter. Take the line again, please, Evelyn.

EVELYN: Now on the best of all the good days of the year, on Christmas Eve, old Scrooge sat busy in his counting house. It was cold, blike, beating weather.

FRANK: She said, "blike, beating."

EVELYN: No, I didn't.

FRANK: "Blike, beating." That's what you said.

EVELYN: I did not.

(LARRY is now SR, retrieving the coat tree and starting to carry it to SL.)

CLAUDE: Never mind! Larry! What are you doing with the coat tree?!

LARRY: It's supposed to be stage left, Claude. It's always been stage left.

CLAUDE: But you don't place it during the scene! Throw your coat over the chair or something!

LARRY: It's always been stage left, Claude. Why was it over thar?

PHYLLIS: (Entering SL.) It's my fault, Claude. I found it backstage and put it there.

CLAUDE: See, Larry? You're supposed to place your own props, and you didn't do it. Phyllis had to do it for you.

LARRY: I'm sorry, Phyllis.

PHYLLIS: No problem, Larry. (Exits.)

LARRY: (To PHYLLIS.) It's jest that ... (To CLAUDE, who periodically attempts to respond ad lib.) It's jest that I git confused havin' t'be stage manager and play two parts to boot. Heck, I git confused jest bein' stage manager. Now I gotta be Bob Cratchit, and then the merchant feller, an' I gotta 'member whar the coat tree goes, an' t'morrow there's gonna be people out here, Claude! There's gonna be people. An' they're gonna know I forgot the danged coat tree, 'cause I'll be standin' thar with m'coat in one hand an' m'hat in t'other, an' I won't 'member whacha said 'bout throwin' it on the chair, 'cause all I'll be thinkin' 'bout is whar is the danged coat tree!

CLAUDE: (Finally spotting an opening, stands.) I'll place the coat tree! It'll be there, okay?

LARRY: It's jest that I gotta be Bob Cratchit

CLAUDE: I know, Larry. Let's try to get past this, okay?

LARRY: Okay, Claude.

CLAUDE: Okay. Sit. (LARRY does.) Evelyn, take it from, "Just then, Scrooge's nephew" (Returns to his seat.)

EVELYN: Just then, Scrooge's nephew, Fred, strode into the shop.

(LESTER, as Fred, enters SL.)

LESTER: A Merry Christmas, Uncle! God save you!

CLAUDE: Cut! Lester, you're wearing "Young Man Scrooge!"

LESTER: I am? They look so much alike

CLAUDE: That's "Young Man Scrooge," Scene 4. This is
"Fred," Scene 1!

LESTER: Does it matter?

CLAUDE: Integrity, Lester!

LESTER: You want me to go change?

CLAUDE: No, we don't have time. Just get it right tomorrow.

Let's cut to, "I ask nothing of you"

LESTER: (To SCROOGE.) I ask nothing of you. Can't we just learn to get along?

FRANK: (Beat.) What? (To CLAUDE.) My nephew is Rodney King?

LESTER: What did I do?

CLAUDE: It's "Why can't we be friends."

LESTER: Same thing.

CLAUDE: We're not doing the modern English version here, Lester. This is Charles Dickens. No paraphrasing.

LESTER: Claude, I'm lucky I even got that out! It's hard enough delivering mail all day and trying to learn one part.
You didn't tell me at the auditions I was going to have to learn three!

CLAUDE: The production committee made the choice, and you agreed. Either we do another insipid play about Santa Claus being stressed out, or the same old "whatever happened to the spirit of Christmas" rubbish, or we try to do something with a little class!

EVELYN: Claude's right. We all agreed to take the challenge.

LARRY: Easy for you to say, Evelyn. All you gotta do is be Narrator.

LESTER: And you don't even have to memorize anything, for cripe's sake!

EVELYN: This book is just a prop.

LESTER: Oh yeah? (Grabs the book and drops it into the trash basket.) Say "bleak, biting" three times fast!
