STORY

"The Reluctant Dragon" is what happens when a gentle, Shakespeare-loving dragon meets a town badly in need of some diversion. In this wonderful musical, Nigel, a wannabe mayoral candidate, invites St. George, a semi-retired dragon slayer, to rid the town of a terrible threat. Of course neither the villagers, who are willing to do anything for a work holiday, or Nigel, with his faux French accent, have actually seen the fearsome beast! Only Jack, a sensible, bookish young man, has met the timid, peace-loving dragon.

Join the merry villagers as they sing "There's a Dragon Loose!" Jack's stepmother, who needs to bump him off before his eighteenth birthday in order to inherit the farm, sings the sly number, "I've Always Cared for You," while Nigel and his easily-distracted assistant sing "Inside Track." There's not a situation riper for laughter than when the village men swagger about singing "We Are a Manly Group of Men," or when the Dragon and St. George hurl Shakespearean slurs at each other in "There's Art Form to the Insult."

The many levels of Grahame's satire will satisfy every age while the music carries all to a satisfying ending.
