STORY OF THE PLAY

Here's a rousing musical defense of the wolf, presented in English Panto style. Panto employs hybridized fairy tales, puns, cross-dressed characters, big-head characters, magical transformations and silliness to the max. With plot aspects from "The Three Little Pigs," "Red Riding Hood," "The Boy Who Cried Wolf," and even "Frankenstein," the pigs are shown to be the real culprits -- clever media manipulators with strictly their own swinish interests at heart. The two-member orchestra also becomes a hilarious part of the performance as they interact with the actors and audience. This script was commissioned by the Empty Space Theatre of Seattle. About 2 hours.

"Palmer makes the point--humans are only animals that try to beat nature instead of living with it--but he also makes a lot of fun. The script and lyrics were confected engagingly...bouncy ,show-bizzy music..."

-- Wayne Johnson , Seattle Times

"Fizzy dizzy material...songs are a pleasing pastiche of showbiz genres."

-- Joe Adcock, Seattle Post-Intelligencer

A NOTE FROM THE PLAYWRIGHT

This show is in the style of English Pantomime, a 350-year-old theatrical tradition in which a known children's story is presented on two levels. The fairy tale appeals to children, while the sometimes bawdy nature of its presentation appeals to adults. This duality is most obvious in Panto traditions like the Pantomime Dame (Granny), a randy old woman always played by a man. Adults find humor in both the drag act and the character's lascivious nature, while smaller children don't get her double entendres and believe the Dame is a real woman (Which is why a true Dame never does I'm really a man jokes.)

Other Panto traditions present include: a magical person (The Talking Animal Fairy) who speaks in rhymed couplets and solves all conflicts by affecting some kind of transformation; people in animal costumes (Wolf, Pigs); a character with a very large head (The Giant Pig of Sumatra); horrendous puns; a female in tights playing a male, called a Pants Character (again the Talking Animal Fairy); and extensive interaction with the audience. Properly done, in fact, the audience is as much a player as any character on stage.

Finally, most Panto productions take advantage of cast members' special skills, something impossible to include in the script. In the premiere production, for instance, the woman playing Red was an accomplished tap dancer, so she opened Act II, Scene 4 doing an elaborate tap solo. One production's Bo Peep was an amateur magician, so she did a Peep-appropriate mediocre magic act at the start of Act II, Scene 3. With the addition of lines to explain the digression, presentations should include similar olio moments for any character except the Wolf, who should always be mysteriously wolfy.

MRS. WATKINS and FRED:

THE BIG BAD WOLF - AND HOW HE GOT THAT WAY!

ACT I
Scene 1

(AT RISE: RAMONA enters dancing, carrying a sign that reads: "A Meadow Near the Village.")

Song #2 SCENE INTRODUCTION

RAMONA:

HELLO, FOLKS, MY NAME'S RAMONA.
IF YOU PLEASE TONIGHT I'M GONNA
TELL YOU WHERE EACH SCENE IS TAKING PLACE! HI!

(RAMONA places the sign on a handy easel and exits; LIGHTS UP on a pasture. Bleating sheep are heard, sleeping sheep are seen. BO PEEP sits against a tree, also asleep, her shepherd's crook at her side. PIG #3 enters carrying his sheep disguise. He looks at Bo, and then at the audience. He takes out an apple, puts it in his mouth, and poses like a roast.)

PIG #3: (Spitting out the apple.) Never again! Do you think you can carve us pigs into roasts and grind us into sausage and inflate us into footballs forever? NO! Eventually you have to pay the porker! (Puts on his sheep disguise during the following.) Tonight, you're going to see what a REAL swine can do! (Drops to the ground near BO.) To baa, or not to baa, that is the question. BAAAAOINK! (No reaction.) BAAAAOINK!

BO: (Barely awake.) I've been out here too long. The sheep are starting to sound like pigs. (Immediately goes back to sleep.)

PIG #3: Psssst! Hey, sweetheart!

(No reaction; PIG #3 pulls BO over with her crook, then feigns sleep. Bo leaps to her feet.)

BO: All right, who did that?! (To her sheep.) It was one of you, wasn't it? (Grabbing her crook by the straight end.)
