STORY OF THE PLAY

Use this play as a fund-raiser, an audience-participation mystery, or just entertainment for a special dinner!

Rev. Longacre is gathering a small group of church members together at a potluck supper to broach the subject of starting a building fund. Duty-bound Hazel arrives first to set up everything and tell the Reverend she hasn’t yet found out who’s been sending him anonymous love letters.

Jenny, a local politician, and Cornelia, a local poet, arrive next, followed by Annie, the church secretary who is hiding something under her coat—and it’s not a covered dish.

Malcomb, the head of the building drive, brings his favorite, vegetarian lasagna, and is followed by the most liberal member of the congregation, Della, who has brought her renowned Dark Indulgence Devil’s Food Cake. The final member to arrive—except for the audience, of course—is the richest woman in town, Lillian Kingsley. Her dish is very unusual.

Before Rev. Longacre is able to give his two-hundred-plus reasons for the drive, Lillian startles the members by saying she is giving the church $1.5 million in jewelry so there won’t even need to be a fund drive. All are stunned. But when Lillian’s purse is retrieved from the cloakroom, it is empty of jewels. A thief has struck!

Well-versed by reading so many mystery novels, Rev. Longacre begins an investigation that leads his church members – and your audience! – to reveal the culprit.

(A complete description of clues for the audience to find is included at the end of the script.)
CAST OF CHARACTERS
(2 m, 6 w)

REV. GAVIN LONGACRE: 28, new pastor of Fairhaven Community Church, an energetic, single man who loves mysteries.

HAZEL HOLGATE: 40s, the real head of the church, she is present at every event and runs the show. She knows everyone and, she thinks, everything that’s happening.

JENNY LOU JEFFERSON: 30s, a local politician running on the fact that she is a direct descendant of Thomas Jefferson. Unfortunately, she’s a bit on the ditzy side.

CORNELIA ST. JEROME: 30s, the local poet who tries to appear as ethereal as possible.

ANNIE CHRISTIE: 20s, the church secretary, a shy, almost naïve young lady who seems like a minnow in a pool of sharks.

MALCOMB PENDLETON: 40s, a new member of the church who has volunteered for the thankless task of heading up the building fund drive.

DELLA DRINKWATER: 30s, provocative in appearance and action, she’s got a good head on her shoulders for business and for spotting hypocrites.

LILLIAN KINGSLEY: 60, the richest woman in Fairhaven who revels in her wealth and power.

CASTING NOTE: The ages of the characters can be adjusted, if necessary, to fit your available actors.

SYNOPSIS OF SCENES

Act II

A Wing and a Prayer

SETTING
The Fairhaven Community Church hall. (If desired, change the name to your actual church name.) Entrance right leads to cloakroom, offices, and restrooms. Entrance left leads to outside and the church itself. At center stands a table covered with a long tablecloth ready to receive the covered dishes. Smaller tables left and right each set with four chairs that the cast may use as blocking dictates. Upstage, to the right of the food table, stands a podium. Décor should simulate a typical church hall. If actually performed in a church hall, use the space as is and simply adjust the blocking so that there is one way to enter from outside and another exit to accommodate the cloakroom and so on.

COSTUMES
Except for the Reverend, all characters wear modern, everyday clothes, coats, and, if desired, gloves and hats. The women should carry purses. Lillian should wear a fur coat along with sparkling jewelry, including rings on all fingers. Della should dress more provocatively than the other ladies. Hazel should dress more conservatively and perhaps wear an apron.

ACT I

(AT RISE: HAZEL bustles on left carrying a covered dish.)

HAZEL: Reverend! Rev. Longacre! Where ARE you?

GAVIN: Sorry!

HAZEL: What are you doing under there? Playing Sherlock Holmes?

GAVIN: Oh, no … this would have been small potatoes for Mr. Holmes. I … I dropped my note cards. (Gathering up note cards.)

HAZEL: Whatever are those for?

GAVIN: (HE rises.) My … my speech.

HAZEL: Good heavens, Reverend! You give us a sermon every week and you don’t need note cards!

GAVIN: Well, when I’m preaching, the word of God inspires me. Tonight, I’m talking about money, and you know what God thinks of money. Consider the lilies of the field, Ms. Holgate.

HAZEL: Yes, well, easy for Him to say! He doesn’t have to replace the roof of Fairhaven Community Church! (Sets dish on table.) There!

GAVIN: And what do you have in your covered dish?

HAZEL: Cold pea salad! My grandmother’s recipe from the Great Depression. Healthy and easy on the pocketbook! (Bustles off right.)

GAVIN: Oh, Ms. Holgate? Ms. Holgate?

(HAZEL enters right carrying a large bouquet of fake flowers which she sets in center of the table.)

HAZEL: We need some lilies of the field, Reverend, don’t you think?

GAVIN: Yes, well, very nice. Have you … have you had a chance to … you know … ask around?

HAZEL: Oh, about your problem?
GAVIN: (Nervously.) Shhhhh!
HAZEL: Nobody else here yet. I always get to these things first. Somebody's got to set up! (Exits right.)
GAVIN: (Calling off right.) Well, have you, Ms. Holgate?

(HAZEL enters right carrying paper plates and napkins, which she sets on one side of the table.)

HAZEL: Have I what?
GAVIN: Had a chance to ... you know?
HAZEL: Sorry, but I don't have a thing to report. Nobody knows a thing about them.
GAVIN: Have you been ... discrete?
HAZEL: Really, Reverend ... I'm the soul of discretion!

(HAZEL exits right as JENNY LOU and CORNELIA enter left, each with a dish.)

JENNY: Evenin', Rev. Longacre!
JENNY: Any luck finding out who's been sending you those letters?
GAVIN: (Covering.) Letters? What letters?
CORNELIA: The ones Hazel's been asking everybody about.
JENNY: (Coyly.) Sounds to me like you've got a girlfriend!

(HAZEL enters right carrying a tray of silverware.)

HAZEL: I told him they're harmless.
GAVIN: I thought you were the soul of discretion, Ms. Holgate.
HAZEL: Well, I haven't told the newspapers yet. Look, do you want to find out who's sending 'em or not? (Slams silverware down on table.) You two go on and put your coats and things in the cloakroom. We don't need 'em cluttering up the dining room.
CORNELIA: Dining room! Reverend, like the Bible says, you can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear.
GAVIN: Well, once we get the new church and hall built, we will have a dining room.

JENNY: (Sighing.) Just in time for the Second Coming!

(JENNY and CORNELIA exit right as ANNIE enters left with a grocery bag. She's also discretely hiding a gift bag under her coat.)

ANNIE: Evening, Reverend!

GAVIN: I told you, Annie … call me Gavin. I've told everybody that.

ANNIE: Oh, but … well ….

HAZEL: Good girl, Annie. The church secretary needs to keep a proper distance. What'd you bring?

ANNIE: I … I don't really know how to cook. (Glancing nervously at GAVIN.) Yet.

GAVIN: Nice of you to bring something anyway.

ANNIE: You like chips and salsa?

GAVIN: Everybody loves chips and salsa.

HAZEL: I don’t. It's cold pea salad that keeps the pipes working.

(JENNY and CORNELIA enter right.)

JENNY: Why, Annie Christie!

CORNELIA: I just love your name. It's so … so … literary.

ANNIE: My parents loved Tolstoy.

JENNY: Who’s he? Your uncle?

(MALCOMB enters left, carrying a dish and a manila folder. ANNIE rushes off right to hang up her coat and hide the gift bag.)

MALCOMB: Hello, all! The party can start now. Malcomb Pendleton's hearty lasagna has arrived!

JENNY: Smells delicious!

HAZEL: What’d you two bring, Jenny and Cornelia?

JENNY: As a proud descendant of President Thomas Jefferson—
