Cases of Mistaken Identity

STORY OF THE PLAY

It's the late 1800s and various travelers are boarding a train for their trip West, including young lovers who are being kept apart by her parents; a secret agent in-training; an elderly woman; a group of showgirls; and a couple who have just pulled off their first jewel heist.

Many of the travelers have identical suitcases which are accidentally switched. As the passengers mingle, some cases are intentionally switched, and then switched again. While the thieves frantically try to keep track of their jewels, the novice agent ends up dressed as a showgirl, thinking it's his disguise.

Meanwhile, name switches convince several of the young women that they're all in love with the same fellow. By the time the train makes its first stop, the rookie porter learns that on this train, all the adventure is just a typical case of mistaken identities! Full evening.

NON-SPEAKING ROLES: Other travelers can be added as seen fit by the director. These parts are especially helpful for the opening and closing scenes on the platform. Passersby to watch the chases, to help create the busy feel of the railway platform and to react to the final unwinding of the plot can be a great help to the mood of the show. This seems to work best when these parts are given real characters to play. For example, old women, flirty girls, poor urchins, railway workers, rich businessmen and snobby ladies would all work well.

PLAYWRIGHT'S NOTE

The chase/running across the stage sequences seem to work best when the characters work on their own individual running styles, styles that are motivated by their characters. Do they run primly perhaps daintily? Is it hard work for them? Do they run a few steps and then jump a little like a skittish colt? The more variety in the runs and the more motivated by character they are, the more interesting these sequences will be.

THE SUITCASES

The suitcases must be identical, of course. Small, straw picnic baskets work very well, as long as the cases match.

Case #1 jewels of Samarkand

Case #2 kiwifruit

Case #3 donation pledges for Hester's charity

Case #4 Leighton family fortune for the new bank

ACT I
Scene 1

(AT RISE: The loading platform of a train in the very late 1800s. The exteriors of three passenger train cars can be seen onstage. MILLICENT and MILLARD, rushed and arguing, are being followed by an overworked TERRENCE carrying their luggage. WILLIAM has a luggage cart and is following RACHEL. JUSTIN [holding case #7] and EDWARD are in a deep discussion and often check their watches. OPAL is talking to PRUDENCE [holding case #2], obviously checking on last-minute details. LILY runs around with a harried THALIA [holding case #5] running after her. NICOLETTE [holding case #12] stands looking forlorn and lost. DANIEL seems to be reading a newspaper. CARLOTTA is bundled up and walks straight to the train and gets aboard immediately. Extras are saying good-bye to relatives and hurrying around with luggage. SFX include a buzz of noise, a conductor's voice, the sound of a train, announcements of departures and arrivals. Into this excitement walks NEVILLE [holding case #1] and SASHA, both dressed smartly but casual. She is obviously nervous.)

SASHA: (After a moment, she turns to him.) Darling! Are you sure about this?

NEVILLE: Don't tell me you're getting cold feet? Not now! It's a little late, you know. I must say, we've pretty much committed ourselves, it seems to me.

SASHA: Oh, Neville, dear, we could go back, couldn't we? I mean, no one may even know yet. We could just go back to the way things were. Couldn't we?

NEVILLE: You know that isn't true. Things weren't even the way they were when they were the way they were, now were they! (Beat. He even confused himself for a moment.) I mean, it's not like we could go back to our flat, now could we. We were evicted two days ago, weren't we? So, where do you propose we go back to? The alley at Monmouth and East 12th? That was a pleasant night, wasn't it!

SASHA: But this seems so drastic! There must be a simpler way! I mean we aren't the first ones to find ourselves in a ... a ... financial drought!

NEVILLE: I thought we agreed! No more living hand-to-mouth. We were going to make the break for it once and for all!

SASHA: I know, Neville darling, but really, to commit a ... a ... felony!

NEVILLE: Sasha! Ssh! (Under his breath.) You must be careful! We are now jewel thieves and you can't go around announcing to everyone on track number nine that we've committed a crime! (Beat.) Nine and crime! They rhyme! Oh, and so does rhyme! How terribly clever of me!

SASHA: I hope you're right about this, Neville darling. I truly hope you are, but if it doesn't work

NEVILLE: It will work! Now, let's go find our stateroom and get this very special case settled in its proper place.

SASHA: Don't you think we should find a safer place to keep our ... our ... loot, I believe we're supposed to call it.

NEVILLE: The fancier the case, the more it will attract attention. No, this case is perfect. They're a dime a dozen. Look around, everyone has one. Even if the authorities should start nosing around, no one will remember a very average couple with a very average case.

SASHA: I must say, Neville, it sounds as if you know what you're doing. Are you sure you weren't a thief before we were married?

NEVILLE: No, darling, but remember, I did go to the theatre a great deal.

SASHA: Yes. All those female chorus girls!

NEVILLE: And I married the only chorus girl that truly mattered.

SASHA: Perhaps I should go back to the stage, Neville. We could return the jewels and then NEVILLE: Sasha! This is the only way! Now, don't frown, sweetheart. From now on, it's only smiles for you!

(HE grabs HER hand and they take off onto the train. As they go, they pass OPAL and PRUDENCE who have been talking.)

OPAL: But, Prudence

PRUDENCE: It's all taken care of, Mrs. Lord. (Checks her notebook.) The reservations for your stateroom have been confirmed. The steward has been notified of your presence and I personally watched all the luggage go on the train.

OPAL: And my kiwifruit?

PRUDENCE: Right here, safe and fresh.

OPAL: Did you know that most Americans just call it kiwi?

PRUDENCE: You have mentioned that before, Mrs. Lord.

OPAL: When my late husband, Roger, the poor dear, and I lived in New Zealand, I actually saw a kiwi, and believe you me, it was not a fruit.

PRUDENCE: Of course not, Mrs. Lord.

Cases of Mistaken Identity

OPAL: No! It's a strange little bird with no wings and a huge beak that it uses to suck up worms and bugs and things. Yech!

PRUDENCE: I've seen pictures, Mrs. Lord.

OPAL: You'd think everyone would know that a kiwi is a bird and that the little brown fruits are kiwifruits, but not these Americans. No. They just keep going to the grocer's and asking for kiwi. I can't wait until someone brings out a bird instead.

PRUDENCE: Not likely, Mrs. Lord.

OPAL: I mean, would you call a grapefruit a grape?

PRUDENCE: You can't change the world, Mrs. Lord. Now, perhaps we should begin boarding the train. We still need to find your stateroom, and you have several manuscripts to peruse.

OPAL: Oh, Prudence. Is this trip really necessary? I mean, cowboys and buffalo and saloons and Indians ... it all seems so ... so ... Yech!

PRUDENCE: We need to pay a visit to the new distribution firm in San Francisco, Mrs. Lord. Besides, it will give you the reading time you need.

OPAL: Oh, very well.

PRUDENCE: Right this way. You are in Stateroom 12A!

(THEY head onto the train, just as HESTER appears on the end of the platform carrying case #3. She obviously knows them, and follows them onto the train, without their knowledge. As Hester runs by MILLARD and MILLICENT, they speak.)

MILLICENT: The passenger car!

MILLARD: It's necessary, Millicent.

MILLICENT: Considering your business, you'd think I'd at least get a stateroom!

MILLARD: You're the one who insisted on this trip, Millicent. The only way I can do it is to make it a working vacation.

MILLICENT: Work! Work! Work! Just once I'd like you to spend as much time on our marriage as you do on "the business"!

MILLARD: The business pays for all your luxuries, I would remind you

MILLICENT: Oh, you do remind me. Everyday you remind me!

MILLARD: And yet you keep on spending!

MILLICENT: I have to do something to keep from going mad from the boredom of being the wife of a man who spends all his time on work!

MILLARD: I have to spend all my time at work to make enough money to cover all your spending!
